TRANSITION TO INDEPENDENT LIVING

The transition into adulthood can be a challenging time for many adolescents. For the majority of parents, support networks are plentiful and may include friends, family, school teachers or even magazines. However for parents of young adolescents on the Autistic Spectrum, the transition from school to independent living is complex and challenging and can seem a daunting and stressful prospect.

The Workshop

There is much emphasis placed on the needs of young autistic children in Wales but unfortunately the needs of adolescents often go unaddressed leaving many parents uncertain as to the options available for their teenage sons and daughters who may wish to continue their education after the age of sixteen to develop social relationships, independent living skills and occupational interests.

This free workshop will enable you to find out about the options available for your son or daughter between the ages of 16-25 as they develop into adulthood.

Why should you attend?

- Meet other like-minded parents
- Learn useful tools and strategies for coping with the challenges of young people with ASD in transition from school to independent living skills
- Increase your knowledge and help your son or daughter to achieve their individual goals
- Find out about post 16 educational provisions for young people aged 16-25 in Wales

A group of students aged 16-25 who are currently attending Beechwood College, Wales' first residential college for young people with Autistic Spectrum Disorder and Aspergers.
